The somewhat famous case of Geo. W. Allen of Washingtonville against Harry Roth of Salem was called for hearing Monday afternoon in Judge Eckley's court at Lisbon. When Columbiana county was voted dry under the Rose law, Mr. Roth was one of the number of men who made vacant store rooms on the Mahoning county side of Washingtonville in demand for saloon purposes. He rented Allen's room at $50 per month, and Allen claimed that when he vacated to again go into the business in Salem that he was indebted to him in the sum of $585.33 under the lease for the room. On July 10, 1912, Allen filed the action in the court here to recover judgment for the amount, and when the case was called for trial on Feb. 25, 1914, it was bitterly fought for four days before it was finally submitted to the jury. A finding was returned by the jury in favor of Roth, and the case was promptly taken on error to the court of appeals, where it was heard when the higher judges were in session here in September a year ago. The court of appeals reversed the finding of the court of common pleas, and remanded the case for further trial, which was called on Monday afternoon.
